The turn to fashion in the fourteenth century began in what would be the last decades of a three-century-long era of expansion in the medieval economy. As such, Fashion's influence on demand may be treated as a late-added feature of the emergence of the European market economy. In 1955, Frederic C. Lane suggested that a consumers theory of economic growth would ask whether part of

In a field awash with histories of consumption, Gilding the Market stands out with its early focus on the lesser-studied fourteenth century. This is a period worth investigation: it saw enhanced trade abroad and developments in sumptuary legislation at home; it also saw the upheaval of war, economic changes and, most significantly, the Black Death.

Gilding the Market | Susan Mosher Stuard

Focusing on the luxury trade in fashionable wear and accessories in Venice, Florence, and other towns in Italy, Gilding the Market investigates a major shift in patterns of consumption at the height of medieval prosperity, which, more remarkably, continued through the subsequent era of plague, return of plague, and increased warfare. A fine sensitivity to the demands of "le pompe," that is
