Uprooted Minds: Surviving the Politics of Terror in the

When I reached the end of Uprooted Minds, I was convinced of Hollander's analysis. I also felt like I did at the Roman Forum. There was the same perversity of power, the cruelty, and the same excess of greed. There was that familiar sense of heroic awe and impossibility. Like the Romans, neoliberalism seems to have infinite resources, and infinite reach. It has spread its tentacles through

Uprooted Minds is a testimonial text that is not dispassionate and 'objective,' but, on the contrary, a revelation of life lived, suffered, felt, and thought about: history incarnate. Hollander's style is rigorous, transparent, solidly researched, and colloquial, and with Uprooted Minds she delivers a social analysis that only a psychoanalyst could write."
